Runs per question: ChatGPT 2, Perplexity 2, Claude 2, Google 1. An engine run once gives a single observation of that answer, not a measure of how consistently it repeats.

READING THIS TABLE

Recommended	The written answer put this institution forward as a choice.
Named	The written answer named it without recommending it.
Listings	It appeared only in a map or listings widget beside the answer, not in the written answer.
Not named	The engine answered this question and did not name it.
No AI answer	The engine was measured here and served no AI answer, so there was no answer to win. Not a miss, and counted in no denominator.
2/2 runs	How many of that engine's runs on this question named the institution. A cell counts once however many of its runs landed, and the fraction is how consistent that answer was.
Engine totals	Recommendations and written-answer namings over the questions that engine answered, with the questions it was measured on beneath. A listings-only cell counts in the denominator and never as named.

METHOD

Illustrative sample account: the institution and every number are invented for demonstration and carry the SAMPLE badge wherever they render; the layout and the rules of counting are exactly the measured product's.

Perplexity	API with search, location set to Albuquerque, 2 runs on 2026-08-24.
Google	the results page with an Albuquerque location on mobile, reading the AI Overview shown, 1 run on 2026-08-24; on 6 questions Google served the map instead and those count in no denominator.

Recommended = a written answer puts the institution forward as a choice; a mention or a lost head-to-head never counts.

The headline blends measured engines by counting a question once if any engine names the institution.
